

-----
Title: To say...

Author: LaBelle Decantor
-----

It would suffice to say...

One achieves a certain standard of dignity and self respect through
reaching out to others.
You could say...

To each his own, though proclamation of such relieves one of
responsibility to that which the subject may require.
They say...

One reaches the height
and security of ones own
being in caring for others
as oneself twicfold.
Say not...

That you resent someone,
for resentment brings
pain to ones own heart,
and forgiveness is lost.

When your heart says...

In that divine way to
which the heart doth
speak, listen closely, for
the words of ones heart
speak only in truths.

To say the least...

Strife will cease, bringing a warm shower of
knowledge and compassion
if not delightfull pleasure
in it's absence.

You might say...

Someone fits you, such as a favorite pair of gloves. Would you not then be humbled by the comfort of them.

Would you say...

After one mistake that
your life is no longer
'worth it'. In saying so,
one can be considered
thrifty, without expence
nothing is gained.
To say nothing...

Accomplishes just that.
Say what you mean...

Or reap the guilt of having lost meaning to
what has been said.

Say that...

You Love someone, expect not less than a reflection of that love in return.

Watch what you say...

A loose tongue oft brings more pain than that of any kind of pleasure.

Say it proudly...

The words forged between mind and mouth are
representitive of oneself, hold not thy head in shame, but speak your words proudly.

Copy printed
1-8-2003

Original Script
7-10-2002